

One of the most important things in life is our health – and we can feel grateful when we are healthy. But what about the people who aren't so lucky, who have been diagnosed with a life-threatening illness? Every 15 minutes, someone in Germany receives the diagnosis of blood cancer – including many children and young people. A stem cell donation from a matching donor is often the only chance of recovery.

The non-profit organization DKMS recruits matching stem cell donors for blood cancer patients all over the world and promotes research for the best possible treatment, in order to improve the chance of recovery. Every cent counts in the fight against blood cancer, since the registration of one new potential donor costs DKMS 35 euros. These costs are not covered by health insurance companies.

This year, we are donating second chances at life in the fight against blood cancer by foregoing our Christmas presents for customers and business partners. Among other things, our money donation means more people can register as new stem cell donors, giving more patients worldwide a second chance at life.

Is there anything better at Christmas, than giving the gift of a new chance at life?
